Adios, Adelman

After five years of dealing with arms control issues, Ken Adelman, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, can hardly wait to change his job. He's already marketing a series of articles on the summit and a newspaper column.

Robert Gates, the No. 2 man at the CIA, recently asked Mr. Adelman when he was leaving. "The day the summit ends," replied Mr. Adelman, whose outgoing manner and easy relationship with the press represent the antithesis of a Washington bureaucrat. "What would you feel if I jumped aboard Gorbachev's plane on Thursday?" Mr. Adelman asked.

"Relief," Mr. Gates replied.
